RYAN TAX REFORM BLUEPRINT LOSING STEAM

1 U.S. House Speaker Paul Ryan's tax reform blueprint appears to be losing its status as the likely framework for the first major tax overhaul since 1986, with rival approaches emerging from the White House, Senate and other quarters in Congress. Congressional aides, lobbyists and analysts say the changing focus could delay passage of a tax bill until late 2017 or 2018, potentially foiling Republican efforts to score a legislative victory for President Donald Trump by August, following last month's failed bill to repeal and replace Obamacare health insurance. Like the healthcare bill, the House Republican tax blueprint stems from Ryan's "A Better Way" legislative agenda launched during the 2016 election campaign. REUTERS

UNITED WON'T USE POLICE TO REMOVE PASSENGERS

2 United Airlines will no longer use law enforcement officers to remove passengers from overbooked flights after global outrage erupted over a video showing a passenger dragged from one of its planes in Chicago. "We're not going to put a law enforcement official ... to remove a booked, paid, seated passenger," United Continental Holdings Inc. Chief Executive Officer Oscar Munoz told ABC News. "We can't do that." Munoz said the incident on Sunday resulted from a "system failure" that prevented employees from using "common sense" in the situation and that Dr. David Dao, whom security officers pulled by his hands from the cabin before takeoff, was not at fault. An online petition calling for Munoz to step down as CEO had more than 45,000 signatures on Wednesday morning. REUTERS

SPICER SAYS HE LET TRUMP DOWN WITH COMMENTS

3 White House spokesman Sean Spicer said he had let down President Donald Trump with his "inexcusable and reprehensible" comments comparing the use of poison gas by Syria's president to the atrocities of Adolf Hitler. "I made a mistake. There's no other way to say it. I got into a topic that I shouldn't have and I screwed up," Spicer said. "On both a personal level and a professional level that will definitely go down as not a very good day in my history," he added. Spicer triggered an uproar at a briefing on Tuesday while discussing chemical weapons use by the government of Syrian President Bashar al-Assad, saying that even Hitler did not use chemical weapons during World War II. PUERTO RICO SLIDING TOWARD BANKRUPTCY

5 Bankruptcy for Puerto Rico is looking ever more likely as the clock ticks down toward a May 1 deadline to restructure $70 billion in debt, ramping up uncertainty for anyone betting on returns from the island's widely held U.S. municipal bonds. When U.S. Congress last year passed the Puerto Rico rescue law dubbed PROMESA, it froze creditor lawsuits against the island so its federally appointed oversight board and creditors could negotiate out of court on the biggest debt restructuring in U.S. municipal history. The freeze expires on May 1, however, and an extension by Congress is "not going to happen," said a Republican aide to the House Committee on Natural Resources, which is in charge of territory matters. A round of mediated talks is scheduled to begin on Thursday. REUTERS

Philly pulls plug on parking meter app

The app's vendor has "financial problems," city officials say.

SAM NEWHOUSE
@scnewhouse
sam.newhouse@metro.us

Thousands of drivers who used their smartphones to pay for on-street parking with the meterUp app are once again dealing with meters and kiosks.

The Philadelphia Parking Authority announced that it suspended the mobile payment app as a payment option on Wednesday after Pango USA, the app service provider, told the agency it cannot pay its bills.

Shutting down the app was "unavoidable," PPA Executive Director Clarena Tolson said in a statement.

"Financial problems being experienced by its service provider, Pango USA, led us to conclude that we must suspend this payment option," she said.

According to the PPA, Pango "is experiencing revenue shortfalls and is unable to pay its contractors including its credit card processor." Pango provides the "digital system that powers the meterUp app."

The PPA acquired the app for free as part of its agreement reached in 2015 with Pango. The service provider was allowed to charge a "convenience fee" whenever the app was used.

"Since the last quarter of 2016, when Pango was purchased and new ownership inherited the PPA Agreement, Pango has tried to work with PPA to find solutions that were consistent with the Agreement and that would give Pango the opportunity to make additional income beyond the $.01 convenience fee, to help limit losses," the company said in a statement.

"After months of meetings without progress on those solutions, and since PPA demanded to cut off value-added services that were already in place, both parties have now agreed that this agreement cannot continue," the statement added.

Pango USA was sold in October 2016 to a company known as Parking by Phone.

Within six months of its launch, the popular app had been downloaded by 36,287 people, and used to pay for more than 90,000 parking sessions. It had been expanded citywide.

The PPA will issue a new request for proposals to find a new app developer and operator, Tolson said, but that process could take months.

Pango also ran the parking app in Harrisburg. That city's parking authorities dropped it last month in favor of a company called Parkmobile.

A total of 47 cities rely on its apps, which has served more than 700,000 customers, Pango stated on its website.

Philly march to demand Trump tax returns

President Donald Trump has made his opinions on his tax returns clear: He doesn't think people care.

"I don't think so. I won. I mean, I became president. No, I don't think they care at all," he told a reporter at a Jan. 11 news conference. "The only one that cares about my tax returns are the reporters, OK?"

Just how many people care about Trump's tax returns will become somewhat evident on April 15, when tax marches are scheduled in Pennsylvania and around the country to demand that the president release his entire tax history.

More than 3,000 people have responded to an RSVP on Facebook to say they intend to participate in the Philly Tax March, scheduled for 10 a.m. on Saturday at Thomas Paine Plaza near JFK and Broad Street.

"Activists across the country will be rallying on Tax Day, calling on Donald Trump to act transparently and release his tax returns," wrote organizers from Philadelphia Jobs with Justice. "This march isn't just about papers — it's about economic justice. It's also about whether Donald Trump and the rest of the superrich are paying their fair share."

The White House released Trump's 2005 return on the day MSNBC host Rachel Maddow was set to report on the return. It showed Trump was taxed at a roughly 25 percent rate that year, $38 million in taxes on $150 million in income.

Trump promised during the campaign to release his tax returns after he was audited, and said he can't release them while they are under audit. But the IRS said anyone can publicly release their own tax documents, and an audit could last indefinitely.

Philly K-9 trainer works with 'dog whisperer' Cesar Milan on new show

Throw Away Dogs cofounder talks about training K-9 Sting for the an episode of "Dog Nation."

SAM NEWHOUSE
@scnewhouse
sam.newhouse@metro.us

When Carol Skaziak was starting Throw Away Dogs, a nonprofit that trains strays into K-9s, she didn't imagine the group getting national attention.

But all that will change Friday, when the latest episode of Cesar Milan's new show "Dog Nation" airs, featuring his visit to Philly and work with Throw Away Dogs.

"I never thought it would take this route," Skaziak said. "I didn't expect it. We didn't reach out to him, he reached out to us."

"Dog Nation" is the latest TV show from Milan, known worldwide as "the dog whisperer," and focuses on communities built around dogs.

The new episode, airing on Nat Geo TV, prominently features his work helping Throw Away Dogs train a difficult K-9 candidate, Sting, during Cesar's visit to the City of Brotherly Love last September.

"He was exactly the way you see him on TV," Skaziak said of working with the "dog whisperer" in person, whom she described as a "mentor," and his son Andre, who also trains dogs.

"There's no camera tricks," she said. "When you see him fix a dog immediately, he really does fix a dog immediately. It's done right then and there."

Throw Away Dogs co-founder Carol Skaziak, of Philly, and Dog Whisperer Cesar Milan, spent time working together in September to train K-9 Sting (right). The sessions will be broadcas in the April 14 episo of Cesar's new show Dog Nation. NAT GEO TV

Skaziak, the wife of a Philly police officer, and Throw Away Dogs cofounder Jason Walters, a SEPTA K-9 cop, started the organization in 2014 to help stray dogs with untapped potential.

So far, the group has trained 17 stray dogs to become K-9s and donated them to police departments around the country. Those dogs are mostly German Shepherds and include some Belgian Malinois.

Graduates include K-9 Sonji, a drug detection dog who works for the Logan County Sheriff's Office in Paris, Arkansas, and K-9 Laika, who now does bomb sweeps at the 9/11 Memorial and Statue of Liberty for the U.S. Parks Police.

Throw Away Dogs is currently training two dogs, said Skaziak while driving to pick up a new German Shepherd that was being surrendered to her by a family. Many dog lovers support the concept of dogs being trained to serve the public.

"We're saving a dog, then we're saving the department money, but what's happening after that is we're making a difference in the communities," Skaziak said. "This is huge. This is completely repurposing an animal, with a great outcome."

> "It's a learning process, but the passion and drive that I have growing inside of me is indescribable."
> Skaziak

Having quit her job at the pet hotel to focus full time on Throw Away Dogs, she said working with Cesar was a milestone in the group's development.

"It's a learning process, but the passion and drive that I have growing inside of me is indescribable," she said. "We have been to hell and back, and I still want to do this."

Empty chair at Philly City Hall honors US military veterans missing in action

The POW/MIA "National Chair of Honor" was unveiled in a ceremony on Monday.

The black chair installed in Philadelphia City Hall will forever remain empty, a silent testament to the thousands of American war veterans still considered missing in action.

Called the POW/MIA "National Chair of Honor," it was unveiled in a ceremony on Monday and dedicated to the memory of service members and the sacrifices they made.

"It's the right thing to do," said Patrick Hughes, a Marine Corps veteran. Hughes is a photographer with Rolling Thunder, a national nonprofit dedicated to preserving the memory of American prisoners of war and those missing in action of all wars.

"Every veteran has earned the absolute right to come home," Hughes said.

It was the latest installation of a memorial chair that has been placed in dozens of sports venues and other locations in Massachusetts, and now includes several in the Philadelphia area. Locally, those include Lincoln Financial Field, Citizens Bank Park, Wells Fargo Center and Temple University's Liacouras Center. Even St. Mary Magdalen de Pazzi Church in South Philly has an entire pew dedicated to the POW/MIA.

Mayor Jim Kenney joined Congressman Bob Brady at the City Hall unveiling, along with members of City Council and local veterans.

At Philadelphia City Hall on Monday, Mayor Jim Kenney, second from right, helped install the POW/MIA National Chair of Honor. PATRICK J. HUGHES

"We are trying to place these chairs in places of prominence to show that the government, knowingly or unknowingly, has left people behind," Hughes said in an interview Wednesday. "An empty chair is an instant reminder [of that]."

Hughes has helped bring more than 40 of the memorial chairs to the tri-state area. A planned Memorial Day ceremony to install a Chair of Honor in the rotunda of the U.S. Capitol in Washington will now take place later this year.

In all, there is an estimated 83,000 U.S. service members still listed as missing in action since World War II.

The Chair of Honor program was started by Joe D'Entremont, a locksmith from Boston, and a fellow Rolling Thunder member. He came up with the idea after seeing a seat left vacant for service members at a racing event in Bristol, Tennessee. D'Entremont, who could not be reached for this article due to personal health issues, was determined to bring similar chairs to sporting venues throughout Massachusetts. The first was placed at Gillette Stadium in 2012.

Since then, more than 100 chairs have been placed throughout D'Entremont's home state, including one at Fenway Park in Boston.

Binge eating is a disorder, not a decision.

Do you have uncontrollable binge eating days? Do you feel embarrassment and guilt after eating excessive amounts of food?

Binge Eating Disorder, or B.E.D., is the most common eating disorder among adults in the US, more common than bulimia or anorexia.

If you have had at least two binge eating days a week for the past 6 months, you may be eligible to take part in a research study testing an investigational medication in adults with B.E.D.

Those who qualify will receive all study-related tests and investigational medication at no cost.

Reimbursement for travel and related expenses may be available for completed study visits.

Bipolar Depression Research Study

Has your life been affected by bipolar depression?

You may be eligible for a research study being conducted in our area to evaluate the safety and effectiveness of an investigational medication for the treatment of bipolar depression.

In order to qualify you must:

- be between 18 and 65 years of age (inclusive)
- have been diagnosed with bipolar I or bipolar II disorder
- be currently having a major depressive episode that started at least 2 weeks ago, but no more than 6 months ago
- have previously had at least one bipolar manic or mixed episode (if you have bipolar I disorder), or hypomanic episode (if you have bipolar II disorder)
- meet additional study criteria.

Qualified participants will receive all study medication and study-related care from a dedicated team of medical staff at no cost.

Health insurance is not required to participate.

Putin says trust erodes under Trump, Moscow icily receives Tillerson

The White House has accused Moscow of trying to cover up Assad's use of chemical weapons after the attack on a town killed 87 people last week.

Moscow has stood by Assad, saying the poison gas belonged to rebels, an explanation Washington dismisses as beyond credible GETTY IMAGES

Russian President Vladimir Putin said Wednesday trust had eroded between the United States and Russia under President Donald Trump as Moscow delivered an unusually hostile reception to Secretary of State Rex Tillerson in a face-off over Syria.

Any hope in Russia that the Trump administration would herald less confrontational relations has been dashed in the past week after the new U.S. leader fired missiles at Syria to punish Moscow's ally for its suspected use of poison gas.

Tillerson met Putin in the Kremlin after talking to his Russian counterpart Sergei Lavrov for around three hours. The Kremlin had previously declined to confirm Putin would meet Tillerson, reflecting tensions over the U.S. strike on Syria.

As Tillerson sat down for talks with Lavrov earlier on Wednesday, a senior Russian official assailed the "primitiveness and loutishness" of U.S. rhetoric, part of a volley of statements that appeared timed to maximize the awkwardness during the first visit by a member of Trump's cabinet.

"One could say that the level of trust on a working level, especially on the military level, has not improved but has rather deteriorated," Putin said in an interview broadcast on Russian television.

He doubled down on Russia's support for Syrian President Bashar al-Assad, repeating denials that Assad's government was to blame for the gas attack last week and adding a new theory that the attack may have been faked by Assad's enemies.

> "One could say that the level of trust on a working level, especially on the military level, has not improved but has rather deteriorated."
> Putin

Tillerson reiterated the U.S. position that Assad must eventually relinquish power in Syria but appeared to take a slightly softer line with Russia.

"We discussed our view that Russia as their closest ally in the conflict perhaps has the best means of helping Assad recognize this reality," he said.

Lavrov had greeted Tillerson with unusually icy remarks, denouncing the missile strike on Syria as illegal and accusing Washington of behaving unpredictably.

One of Lavrov's deputies was even more undiplomatic.

"In general, primitiveness and loutishness are very characteristic of the current rhetoric coming out of Washington," Deputy Foreign Minister Sergei Ryabkov told Russia's state-owned RIA news agency.

But Lavrov said some progress had been made on Syria at the meeting and that a working group would be set up to examine the poor state of U.S.-Russia ties. He also said that Putin had agreed to reactivate a U.S.-Russian air safety agreement over Syria which Moscow suspended after the U.S. missile strikes.

Tillerson noted the low level of trust between the two countries.

"The world's two foremost nuclear powers cannot have this kind of relationship," he said.

Moscow's hostility to Trump administration figures is a sharp change from last year, when Putin hailed Trump as a strong figure and Russian state television was consistently full of effusive praise for him. REUTERS

United passenger launches legal action

Lawyers for the passenger dragged from a United Airlines plane in Chicago filed an emergency request with an Illinois state court on Wednesday to require the carrier to preserve video recordings and other evidence related to the incident.

Citing the risk of "serious prejudice" to their client, Dr. David Dao, the lawyers want United and the City of Chicago, which runs O'Hare International Airport, to preserve surveillance videos, cockpit voice recordings, passenger and crew lists, and other materials related to United Flight 3411. Chicago's Aviation Department said on Wednesday that two more officers had been placed on leave in connection with the April 9 incident, during which airport security officers dragged Dao from his seat aboard a United jet headed for Louisville, Kentucky. One officer was placed on leave on Tuesday.

Paul Callan, a civil and criminal trial lawyer in New York, said the public outcry over Dao's treatment would likely push the airline to a quick and generous settlement.

"Because United has such a catastrophic PR problem, this case has a much greater value than such a case would normally have," he said.

United Chief Executive Oscar Munoz on Wednesday apologized to Dao, his family and United customers in an ABC News interview, saying the company would no longer use law enforcement officers to remove passengers from overbooked flights.

Dr. David Dao TWITTER/@ KAYLYN_DAVIS

"This can never, will never happen again," he said.

Munoz is under pressure to contain a torrent of bad publicity and calls for boycotts against United unleashed by videos that captured Dao's rough treatment by airline and airport security staff.

Dao was removed to make room for additional crew members, United said.

Footage from the incident shows Dao, bloodied and disheveled, returning to the cabin and repeating: "Just kill me. Kill me," and "I have to go home."

As of Tuesday, Dao was still in a Chicago hospital recovering from his injuries, his lawyer said.

On Wednesday, United said it would compensate all passengers on board the flight the cost of their tickets.

Munoz said United would be examining the way it compensates customers who volunteer to give up seats on overbooked planes, adding that it would likely not demand that seated passengers surrender their places.

Some U.S. lawmakers called for new rules that could make it more difficult for airlines to overbook flights as a tool for increasing revenue.

President Donald Trump said it was "horrible" that Dao was dragged off the flight, according to an interview from the Wall Street Journal. Rather than calling for an end to the practice of overselling, Trump said that instead, there should be no upper limit to incentives carriers can offer passengers in exchange for their seats on overbooked flights.

Republican and Democratic leaders of the Senate committee that oversees transportation have questioned United's actions.

But Delta Air Lines Inc CEO Ed Bastian on Wednesday defended overbooking as "a valid business practice" that does not require additional oversight by the government. REUTERS

Russia blocks UN condemnation of Syria attack

It was the eighth time during Syria's six-year-old civil war that Moscow has used its veto power on the Security Council to shield Assad's government.

Russia blocked a Western-led effort at the U.N. Security Council on Wednesday to condemn last week's deadly gas attack in Syria and push Moscow's ally President Bashar al-Assad to cooperate with international inquiries into the incident.

In the latest veto, Russia blocked a draft resolution backed by the United States, France and Britain to denounce the attack in the town of Khan Sheikhoun and tell Assad's government to provide access for investigators and information such as flight plans.

The toxic gas attack on April 4 prompted the United States to launch missile strikes on a Syrian air base and widened a rift between the United States and Russia.

Russian President Vladimir Putin said on Wednesday that trust had eroded between the two countries under U.S. President Donald Trump.

U.S. Secretary of State Rex Tillerson echoed that comment after meetings with Russian leaders in Moscow, saying that relations are at a low point with a low level of trust. Tillerson called for Assad to eventually relinquish power.

Russian Deputy Permanent Representative to the United Nations Vladimir Safronkov attends a meeting that gathered to hold a vote on a resolution condemning the April 4 chemical attack in Syria's Idlib on Wednesday at U.N. Headquarters in New York City. GETTY IMAGES

U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations, Nikki Haley, called on Moscow to stop protecting Assad and said the United States wants to work with Russia toward a political solution for Syria.

"Russia once again has chosen to side with Assad, even as the rest of the world, including the Arab world, overwhelmingly comes together to condemn this murderous regime," Haley told the 15-member Security Council.

"If the regime is innocent, as Russia claims, the information requested in this resolution would have vindicated them."

Russia's deputy U.N. envoy, Vladimir Safronkov, said the draft resolution laid blame prior to an independent investigation.

"I'm amazed that this was the conclusion. No one has yet visited the site of the crime. How do you know that?" he said.

He said the U.S. attack on the Syrian air base "was carried out in violation of international norms."

Syria's government has denied responsibility for the gas attack in a rebel-held area of northern Syria that killed at least 87 people, many of them children.

A fact-finding mission from the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW) is investigating the attack.

If it determines that chemical weapons were used, then a joint U.N./OPCW investigation will look at the incident to determine who is to blame. This team has already found Syrian government forces were responsible for three chlorine gas attacks in 2014 and 2015 and that Islamic State militants used mustard gas.

China, which has vetoed six resolutions on Syria since the civil war began, abstained from Wednesday's U.N. vote, along with Ethiopia and Kazakhstan. Ten countries voted in favor of the text, while Bolivia joined Russia in voting no.

President Donald Trump, speaking at an event in the White House, said he was not surprised by China's abstention.

Britain's U.N. Ambassador Matthew Rycroft told the Security Council that samples taken from the site of the April 4 attack had been analyzed by British scientists and tested positive for the nerve gas sarin. He said Assad's government was responsible.

Diplomats said that Russia has put forward a rival draft resolution that expresses concern at last week's gas attack and condemns the U.S. strike on Syria. It was unclear if Moscow planned to put the text to a vote.

Daily Mail to pay Melania Trump damages over modeling claims

Melania Trump
GETTY IMAGES

Britain's Daily Mail agreed on Wednesday to pay Melania Trump an undisclosed sum and issue an apology after it published an article saying the first lady had offered "services beyond simply modeling" in her former job.

President Donald Trump's wife, 46, had sued the publisher of the Daily Mail in Britain and also filed a $150 million lawsuit against it in New York, claiming the article had cost her millions of dollars in potential business.

A person familiar with the situation said the settlement was worth less than $3 million, including legal costs and damages.

The Daily Mail, which runs what it calls the world's largest English-language newspaper website, apologized for the article on Wednesday and issued a retraction on its home page.

"An article on 20th August 2016 about Melania Trump ... questioned the nature of her work as a professional model, and republished allegations that she provided services beyond simply modeling," publisher Associated Newspapers said.

"We accept that these allegations about Mrs. Trump are not true and we retract and withdraw them ... we have agreed to pay her damages and costs."

At the High Court in London, Trump's lawyer said the article, headlined "Racy photos and troubling questions about his wife's past that could derail Trump," was published as a two-page spread and accompanied by an old photo of Melania Trump standing naked with her front against a wall but looking back at the camera.

"Readers of the newspaper that day could not fail to miss the article," John Kelly told the court. "The article included false and defamatory claims about the claimant which questioned the nature of her work as a professional model.

"The suggestion that such allegations even merit investigation is deeply offensive and has caused a great deal of upset and distress to the claimant," he said.

Joe Biden to speak at Harvard's Class Day

Former Vice President Joe Biden will head to Harvard on May 24 to speak at the university's 2017 Class Day.

Biden, who before becoming former President Obama's No. 2 represented Delaware in the Senate, will speak to graduating seniors before their commencement, the school announced on Wednesday.

Harvard dropout and Facebook founder Mark Zuckerberg will deliver the commencement address the next day.

The Class Day tradition started in 1968 when the Senior Class Committee began inviting its own speakers, according to the university. The first invited guest was Martin Luther King Jr.; his widow Coretta Scott King delivered the Class Day speech in his place after his assassination.

Last year, actress Rashida Jones, who attended Harvard, delivered the Class Day address. Other speakers have included Natalie Portman, NBC "Today" anchor Matt Lauer and former President Bill Clinton.

"I am honored to be invited to be a part of this special day at Harvard," Biden said in a statement. "Today's generation of students is the most engaged, the most tolerant and the best educated in the history of the United States of America. I am grateful for the opportunity to speak to this year's graduating class about the great power they hold to shape our nation's future."

Class Day events, which include award presentations and student speeches, will take place at 2 p.m., in Tercentenary Theatre in Harvard Yard, and will be livestreamed.

Civil liberties groups sue US, seek details on travel ban

The suits are an attempt to enforce requests filed under the Freedom of Information Act just days after Trump signed his first executive order limiting travel.

Protestors show solidarity with American Muslims. GETTY IMAGES

Civil liberties groups on Wednesday said they were filing a series of lawsuits against the federal government seeking details on how federal agencies enforced President Donald Trump's ban on travelers from seven Muslim-majority countries.

The lawsuits were filed by local chapters of the American Civil Liberties Union against U.S. Customs and Border Protection and the Department of Homeland Security and cover their operations in 14 cities stretching from Portland, Maine, to San Diego.

That Jan. 27 order, intended to fulfill a campaign promise to take a tough stance on immigration, first temporarily barred travelers from Iran, Iraq, Libya, Somalia, Sudan, Syria and Yemen. The order, which also temporarily barred refugees, led to a weekend of chaos at airports with travelers barred from entering the country upon landing while thousands of people turned out to protest the measures.

A federal judge ordered a halt to enforcement of that ban and Trump followed up in March with a less-sweeping order that did not limit travelers from Iraq, but which has also been challenged in courts. Opponents said the orders violated the Constitution's prohibitions on religious discrimination, citing Trump's campaign promises to impose a "Muslim ban."

The Trump administration said the restrictions are legal and are necessary to protect national security.

The suits, filed in federal courts, seek disclosure of how many people have been detained or subjected to additional screening since the first executive order as well as the guidance that was provided to DHS staff about how to enforce the order.

"Customs and Border Protection has a long, rich history of ignoring its obligations under the Freedom of Information Act and so these lawsuits are an effort to enforce its obligations," said Zachary Heiden, legal director at the ACLU of Maine, in a phone interview. He noted that the ACLU filed its FOIA requests for information on Feb. 2.

Officials at CBP and DHS did not immediately respond to requests for comment on the suits.

In addition to Portland and San Diego, the suits cover CBP operations in Atlanta, Baltimore, Boston, Chicago, Detroit, Houston, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Tucson, Miami and Tampa. One suit filed in Florida covers the two cities in that state. REUTERS

Widow of Orlando nightclub gunman pleads not guilty in Florida court

The widow of the gunman who killed 49 people at a gay nightclub in Orlando, Florida, pleaded not guilty on Wednesday to aiding her husband in the June 2016 killings.

Noor Salman, 30, the wife of Omar Mateen, appeared in federal court in Orlando for less than five minutes. It was her first court appearance in Florida since she was transferred by U.S. marshals from California where she had been held.

She faces charges of obstruction of justice and aiding and abetting Mateen in his attempt to provide material support to a terrorist organization. Prosecutors have said she made up a cover story for her husband that she told to police officers and FBI agents.

Salman has said she was herself a victim of domestic abuse by Mateen and was unaware of his intentions to attack the nightclub.

Her trial is scheduled to begin in June before U.S. District Judge Paul Byron in Orlando.

Salman's attorney waived the reading of the indictment against her and entered pleas of not guilty to the charges.

Police killed Mateen, a U.S. citizen of Afghan descent, after the shooting rampage at the Pulse nightclub. After the killings began, Mateen called emergency dispatchers to profess allegiance to a leader of the Islamic State militant group. REUTERS

MAKING COLLEGE PLANS

Opinion

People get all lathered up over things the federal government does, even when those things don't actually have a lot to do with our lives. But big states can also take actions which affect the whole county. That's why educators are on red alert over pending legislation in New York.

The Empire State appears poised to approve free college for — well, if not everyone — at least an awful lot of folks who might otherwise struggle mightily to pay the bills.

This has been a Democratic dream for years, and Bernie Sanders (and to a lesser degree, Hillary Clinton) raised it to grail status during the last election. And why not? College costs have exploded like vig payments to the mob, far outpacing inflation. Many families have no prayer of saving enough, and when their kids head off to school they know they are diving into an ocean of debt.

The Excelsior Scholarship will be aimed at New York kids going to their own state's colleges, as long as their families make less than $100,000 a year. The promise: free tuition for four years of college or two years of community college for a significant portion of the middle class.

Room, board, and books are not included and that still involves a lot of cash, but the plan is nonetheless worth thousands to any qualifying family.

There are plenty of details to consider. For example, students who go for this will have to remain and work in the state for several years after graduating or the cost of their education becomes a loan they must repay. And private schools, which have griped this could cut into their client base, will get a little funding assistance too.

Lawmakers will certainly have to tweak it along the way. This is, after all, a big program which will cost a bundle.

Still, while some less-populous states have been fiddling with some aspects of free college, if all goes as expected, New York will become the biggest player to join in this grand experiment. And that has the real possibility of tipping some others over the edge … bringing one of Bernie Sanders' most ardent ideas to life, long after his campaign died.

Japan automakers look to robots to keep elderly on the move

Toyota Motor Corp. said it saw the possibility of becoming a mass producer of robots to help the elderly in a country whose population is ageing faster than the rest of the world as the birthrate decreases.

An attendant demonstrates Toyota Motor Corp.'s research and development-based torque servo robot arm, which uses the bilateral master-slave manipulation function, at the International Robot Exhibition in Tokyo, Japan. GETTY IMAGES

Japanese automakers are looking beyond the industry trend to develop self-driving cars and turning their attention to robots to help keep the country's rapidly graying society on the move.

The country's changing demographics place its automakers in a unique situation. Along with the issues usually associated with falling populations such as labor shortages and pension squeezes, Japan also faces dwindling domestic demand for cars.

Toyota, the world's second largest automaker, made its first foray into commercializing rehabilitation robots on Wednesday, launching a rental service for its walk assist system, which helps patients to learn how to walk again after suffering strokes and other conditions.

Toyota's system follows the release by Honda Motor Co. of its own walking assist "robotic legs" in 2015, which was based on technology developed for its ASIMO dancing robot.

"If there's a way that we can enable more elderly people to stay mobile after they can no longer drive, we have to look beyond just cars and evolve into a maker of robots," Toshiyuki Isobe, chief officer of Toyota's Frontier Research Center, told Reuters in an interview on Wednesday.

> "Be it robots or cars, if there's a need for mass produced robots, we should do it with gusto."
> Isobe

Speaking to reporters, he added that mass producing robots would be a natural step for the company which evolved from a loom maker in 1905 into an automaker whose mission is to "make practical products which serve a purpose."

"Be it robots or cars, if there's a need for mass produced robots, we should do it with gusto," Isobe said.

Japan is graying faster than the rest of the world, with the number of people aged 65 or older accounting for 26.7 percent of the population in 2015, dwarfing the global average of about 8.5 percent.

As a result, demand for care services for elderly people has boomed and a shrinking working population means that fewer able-bodied adults are available to look after them.

UK lawmakers: Brexit referendum website might have been hacked

A website which allowed Britons to register to vote in last year's European Union referendum might have been targeted by foreign hackers causing it to crash before the deadline, a committee of British lawmakers said.

More than a million potential voters applied to register online in the run up to the deadline two weeks before last June's vote and the government extended the cut-off point after the website crashed, blaming it on a late rush by mainly young citizens.

In a report, parliament's Public Administration and Constitutional Affairs Committee said it did not rule out the possibility that the crash was caused by a Distributed Denial of Service cyber attack.

"PACAC is deeply concerned about these allegations about foreign interference," said the report, adding the committee did not believe any interference had impacted the outcome.

Russia has been accused of trying to influence the 2016 U.S. election and the committee said the government needed to ensure future elections and referendums were monitored.

Comedian Charlie Murphy dies at age 57

Comedian and actor Charlie Murphy died in his sleep at a New York hospital on Wednesday at age 57 after suffering from leukemia, entertainment media reported.

Murphy, whose younger brother is "Coming to America" and "The Nutty Professor" star Eddie Murphy, was a cast member and sketch writer on Comedy Central's "Chappelle's Show." He became a fan favorite with his "True Hollywood Story" skits about his time with his brother, Rick James and Prince. The Brooklyn native also co-wrote and acted in some of his brother's movies, including the 2007 comedy "Norbit."

Murphy's agent William Rodriguez was not immediately available for comment.

His death was first reported by TMZ and the Hollywood Reporter.

Allison Williams says goodbye to Marnie

HBO/MARK SCHAFER

THE FUN STARTS HERE

The actress tells us about her last day on the "Girls" set.

ARIANA BUSTOS/MWN
@MetroNewYork
letters@metro.us

It's no small feat to play one of the most unlikable characters on "Girls," much less for six seasons. While Marnie Michaels is often maligned for her narcissism and naivete, embarrassing musical moments and poor relationship choices, after inhabiting the role for six years, Allison Williams came to appreciate her better qualities. Before the end of "Girls," the 28-year-old actress tells us what she admires about Marnie and what she's learned from the show.

What aspects of Marnie have you adopted and vice versa throughout the series?
I like her bravery, how she behaves without fear. I'm not like that, but maybe it's a good thing because every time Marnie does something wild, like singing, it's embarrassing. I would not do that. Something good about Marnie is that when she has an idea, she simply does it without worrying about what others might think of her. She works in mysterious ways, I'm still learning, but I probably will not start picking up the microphone at other people's parties to sing when no one wants me to. From me, Marnie took my entire body, the way I look. She took everything I have. I think I gave her a home.

How have you evolved as an actress during these six seasons?
It's so strange. In the first season I had no idea what I was doing. All my training had been on improvising. So I just knew what I did not have to do: improvise. But over time I got better with this ability to step in and know exactly how to interpret the situation Marnie was going through. Part of that is because I got to know Marnie very well."Girls" feels very natural to me, to just enter into Marnie's mind and be there.

What values do you think "Girls" has instilled in female viewers?
I think empowerment and self-sufficiency. At the end of the day you have to be all you need for yourself, which is something that all the characters in the series end up learning in some way. It's a bit sad to think that you can't trust others for certain reasons, but I think they all realize they have to be there when the other person needs it. And that is the only way to be a good friend. I think that is a very important value for girls: knowing that before you start helping others, you have to know yourself and be your best advocate and support system. So, when someone harmful comes into your life, you know exactly how to deal with it.

How was the last day of shooting?
It was so sad. My last day was really sad, although I had finished shooting the day before, I was on the set to accompany Lena and distract her, because none of the scenes she had to do were sad. So, we both sat down and started to talk about our best moments during the series and remembered a lot of things. It was happy, but also really strange to know we were not going to be together again with the entire team and the cast.

Do you think there will be a movie or spin-off of "Girls"?
I hope we can come back to "Girls" one day. I know Lena has mentioned it in some interviews, and it would be fascinating to see what the characters are doing in 10 years from now and find out if my fantasy of what I want for Marnie came true. I want her to marry Elijah and have a very modern marriage where everyone can do whatever they want outside the couple, have children they love and support each other as best and inseparable friends. And that they can live their romantic fantasies wherever they are.

GETTY IMAGES

What's next for you?
I was in the movie "Get Out." And then I'll work on several things for myself until something else comes up. I'm not interested in doing something I've already done, and I'm not going to play anything that resembles Marnie.

'Doctor Who' is new again

Bill Potts joins The Doctor for the 10th season of "Doctor Who," starting April 15 on BBC America. BBC AMERICA

The rebooted sci-fi series' 10th season has tons of treats in store for new and longtime fans.

SARAH YANEZ-RICHARDS
@MetroNewYork
letters@metro.us

Can a show entering its 10th season really be new again? That's the magic of "Doctor Who," the sci-fi series about a time-traveling alien called The Doctor and his human Companion, which began in 1963, was canceled in 1989 and revived by the BBC in 2005.

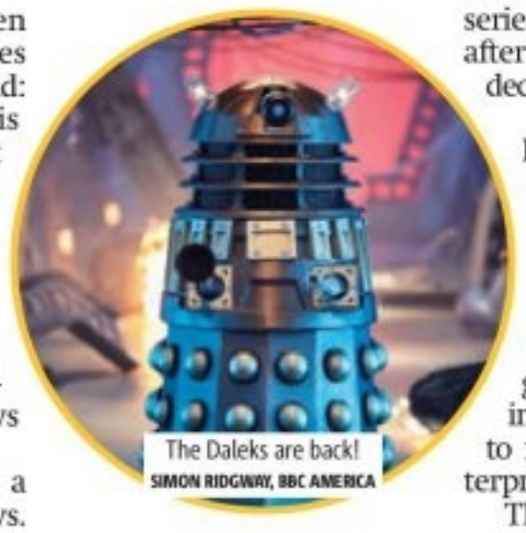
When Season 10 premieres on Saturday, April 15, on BBC America, it will introduce a new Companion — the first openly gay one, at that — and bring back some of the series' most iconic villains for even wilder adventures. It's a treat for longtime fans, and a great way to introduce new ones to the "Doctor Who" universe. Stars Peter Capaldi and Pearl Mackie, along with showrunner Steven Moffat, tell us what to expect.

Her name is Bill

Even more than when The Doctor regenerates into a new form (read: actor), changing his Companion is a great way for new fans to get into the show. The character of Bill Potts (Mackie) took nearly a year to craft, according to Moffat, who doesn't see her sexuality as the headline news it's become.

"We do not expect a pat on the back," he says. "This is the least representation that people should have, and it has taken a long time to get here."

For her part, Mackie describes her character as "very real and very human." Unlike the calculating, manic alien that is The Doctor, the human Companion is meant to be a touchstone for viewers. "I hope people can identify with her. Bill says inopportune things, she gets carried away by her impulses and how she feels … sometimes she does wrong things, but for the right reasons. And, on top of that, she's very funny."



The Daleks are back!
SIMON RIDGWAY, BBC AMERICA

Getting some answers

While many other Companions simply accept The Doctor's wonky reality, Bill is going to need a little explanation before risking her life for adventures in space and time. "She asks him the questions that should be asked, and these are questions that have not been asked before," says Moffat. "It is not because she is an interrogator, but because she is alive and curious."

Perhaps as a last hurrah by Moffat after a long tenure as showrunner, The Doctor will also confront some of his oldest enemies: The original 1960s Cybermen make a return, as do both incarnations of his ultimate frenemy, The Master and, of course, the Daleks.

If you're not up on the mythology, don't worry — with Bill along, The Doctor will be explaining his convoluted history as he deals with whatever trouble he's gotten them into.

A last hurrah

It's been Capaldi's dream to play The Doctor since he watched the original series at 5 years old, but after three seasons he's decided to move on.

"Sad, because it has been a great experience," he says of leaving the Tardis, his dimension-hopping phone booth. "I loved being a Doctor, but it's time to go. It was becoming increasingly difficult to find new ways to interpret the character."

That said, the third season definitely gave him plenty to work with. He hints that The Doctor sees "great potential" in Bill. "She is not afraid of things that happen to her or of what The Doctor shows."

Where should the 'Fast and the Furious' series go next?

The action franchise's grip on reality is tentative, so what extreme plot points could the future hold?

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Our heroes drive over ice or whatever in the new "The Fate of the Furious," in theaters Friday. MARK ROGERS

Remember "The Fast and the Furious"? We mean the original. It was 2001, and the summer movie season was gifted with a simple entertainment in which two up-and-comers — one Vin Diesel and one Paul Walker — played ripped dudes who drive cars real fast. It wasn't "realistic," but compared to the outlandish, surreal, OTT events of the last few sequels, it's an English period piece. At some point a relatively small, Roger Corman-style exploitation movie about cars morphed into a franchise where The Rock battles a helicopter and our heroes jump a car between two separate Abu Dhabi skyscrapers.

Both those events hail from "Furious 7." Perhaps you remember the longest airline tarmac in the world from "Fast & Furious 6"? There are even silly sights in "The Fate of the Furious," too. Where on earth could they go next? How could they top a series that no longer has much to do with the stripped-down original? Well, we have some suggestions:

Under the sea

Over 70 percent of the Earth's surface is ocean. That's a lot of new places to drive around. Dom could equip his team's gallery of sweet rides with aquatic capabilities, much like that Bond car from "The Spy Who Loved Me" that can turn into an underwater cruiser. Their adventures could be of the Jules Verne variety, with our heroes discovering mermaids and fantastical deep sea monsters. And the hand-to-hand combat could be done in the style of the hilarious underwater fight that capped off the ZAZ parody "Top Secret!"

Time travel

Don't remake "Back to the Future," as execs have occasionally threatened to do. Just let the "Fast/Furious" team go back in time. Instead of a tricked-up DeLorean, we'd have an even faster ride that can jump to the past in about three seconds. Dom et al. could kill Hitler or save Rome from burning or fight in the Revolutionary War or tussle with the armies of Alexander the Great. They could become cowboys or centurions or hang with Genghis Khan. Or they could go back to the first film and tell everyone how ridiculous the series would become one day.

A mash-up movie

Batman has fought Superman. The Men in Black once nearly paired with the "21 Jump Street" reboot team, for some reason. Why not do some crossover episode involving the "Furious" hot rodders? We'd like to see them battle the Transformers, with one army of speed racers versus another in a cross-country marathon — basically "The Cannonball Run" but with a part where The Rock and Bumblebee beat each other up.

Straight-up race car movie

Or they could return to their roots. Having caused enough mischief around the globe, our team could retire and go back to their Los Angeles digs. But you can't keep good speed junkies down for long. Eventually Dom would secretly nip off to some old-fashioned illegal races, while Letty could slip off to steal some goods. Along the way they teach some young kids how to do what they do. They could be played by Ashton Sanders of "Moonlight" and Jacob Tremblay from "Room." And thus the series could live on into the infinite.

Charlize Theron (with Vin Diesel) plays the villain with terrible hair in "The Fate of the Furious." UNIVERSAL PICTURES

"The Fate of the Furious"

Director: F. Gary Gray
Stars: Vin Diesel, Michelle Rodriguez

The only way to go, as they say, is up. But where exactly is "up" when your last film had the Rock fighting a helicopter? Or a sweet ride speeding from one skyscraper into another skyscraper? Or a part where Thai martial arts god Tony Jaa is bested by Paul Walker (or anyone, for that matter)? The "Fast and/or Furious" franchise has grown more ludicrous with each installment. (In fact, the turning point was when they added Ludacris himself to the team in "Fast Five.") Episode eight in the most confusingly titled franchise aside from the "Rambo" series can't top what came before. It's an auto-fetishist saga that's officially spinning its wheels.

OK, maybe that's unfair: It does sport the Rock manhandling a torpedo and a race against a submarine and Jason Statham killing untold minions while holding a baby. Stupid thrills are still stupid thrills, and "Fate" at least adds something generally fresh to the series: a story. Rather than the usual Bondian amalgam of set pieces half-assedly strung together, it has Vin Diesel's Dom — our heroes' glowering honcho and obnoxious overuser of the word "family" — mysteriously go bad. Turning on his gang of thieves (or whatever they are now), he shacks up with a mega-ultra-super-hacker played by Charlize Theron, who has a yen for stealing assorted apocalyptic MacGuffins.

"Fate" is a little too quick to supply a reason for Dom going Benedict Arnold; it would have been fun to see him spend a little bit longer acting like the Evil Man of Steel from "Superman III." Still, there is Theron, predictably delightful as she orgasmically purrs threats, rising above her credibility-subtracting thin, blonde dreadlocks. And there are action scenes that think outside-the-box, including a prison break that brings back the old quicksilver Statham, and a clever (and, to New Yorkers, harrowing) stretch where a sea of hacked cars speed down Fifth Avenue.

Nevermind that it's a Hollywood blockbuster in which no one bats an eye that the NSA can spy on anyone near a camera. And maybe disregard its eternally uninspired mid-action scene quips. Here's a limo that comes equipped with a helicopter gun and Dame Helen Mirren swinging by long enough to drop the token f-bomb. Spinning wheels is only a problem when you suck. MP

FESTIVALS

Cinedelphia Film Festival

The fifth annual Cinedelphia Film Festival kicks off this weekend, with nearly 30 screenings of locally shot rarities and other oddball selections from the video era. The two-week fest begins Thursday night with the Philly premiere of "Blue Velvet Revisited," which goes behind the scenes during the making of David Lynch neo-noir mystery "Blue Velvet." Other flicks to look out for this weekend include 1980s punk-rock sci-fi gem "Repo Man," and a teenage vampire fable that garnered praise at Cannes and SXSW, "Transfiguration."

G. MILLER FOR VISIT PHILADELPHIA

While they're on spring break this week, let your little monkeys burn off steam at circus camp. The Philadelphia School of Circus Arts hosts this brand new day camp that features big-top-centric activities out the wazoo. Led by trained circus professionals, little attendees can test their balance on a tightrope, try their hands at juggling, get all twisted up while hanging upside down on an aerial rope and more.

Sweet Spirit

Fresh off the SXSW stage, Austin's self-proclaimed "freak parade" Sweet Spirit sashay into Philly for a record release show in Manayunk. Led by standout vocalist Sabrina Ellis (think Gwen Stefani meets Freddie Mercury), album "St. Mojo" is an energetic blend of garage rock meets glam meets dance pop. It'll be sure to have Main Street bumping Friday night.

Let's Danza!

Come together in the name of local celebrities and super danceable tunes Saturday night at South Bowl. Let's Danza!, a Tony Danza-themed supergroup comprising members of Brothers Past and Particle, headline the evening that also features an opening performance by Space Bacon. In case you haven't already guessed it, the Brooklyn-based jamtronica foursome takes its name from two other locally raised stars of the '80s, Kevin Spacey and Kevin Bacon.

Philly Celebrates Jazz

April is Jazz Appreciation Month in Philadelphia, which means you have 30 days to take in a host of events celebrating the genre. Check creativephl.org for a multitude of events happening every day — including free concerts in City Hall on Wednesdays from noon to 1 p.m. Among the one-off performances this weekend are legendary saxophonist Sam Reed at Canaan Baptist Church and a live jazz brunch at Manayunk Brewing Co. on Sunday.

5 Things you can't miss at the Easter Promenade

Mr. and Mrs Peter Cottontail in their 1956 Thunderbird ALL PHOTOS PROVIDED.

This weekend marks its 86th anniversary.

JENNIFER LOGUE
@jenniferlogue
jennifer.logue@metro.us

Easter is this weekend, and if you're looking for some family-friendly fun, hop on down to the 86th annual Easter Promenade on Sunday, April 16.

The event begins at 12:30 p.m. at Passyunk Avenue and South Street, with a formal introduction from master of ceremonies, Henri David. Promenade participants will stroll to Headhouse Square (at 2nd Street), where most of the action will be happening.

Here are five things you definitely shouldn't miss:

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Cottontail

The Easter Bunny and his wife will be at the event, hanging out with the kids and grownups alike, as well as cruising down South Street in their 1956 Thunderbird.

The live music

Big music fan? Be sure to make time in your schedule to hear the Philadelphia Freedom Band perform. They will march in the promenade and will even perform the "Bunny Hop" at the mainstage area in Headhouse Square. During this time, volunteers dressed as bunnies will dance along with the audience.

Henri David's outfit

As master of ceremonies, Henri David always goes all-out with his ensemble. His costumes have sometimes been as big as three feet wide and up to four feet high — always with a lot of color and that South Street "razzle dazzle." David has served as master of ceremonies since the '80s.

Taking part in the costume contest

Both children and adults can enter the costume contests, being judged this year by a team of celebrity judges (including me) at Headhouse Square. The 12 categories are: best dressed little girl, best dressed little boy, best dressed young girl, best dressed young boy, best dressed teen girl, best dressed teen boy, best dressed woman, best dressed man, best dressed family, best dressed pet, best Easter bonnet and best South Street razzle dazzle. All children who enter receive free Easter treats and stickers.

Digging into brunch specials

Easter isn't complete without indulging in a decadent meal with the family. A few area restaurants offering special Easter brunches include: The Twisted Tail, Pizzeria Stella, The Little Lion, Bridget Foy's and more.

Entrants for Best Dressed Girls wave their numbers at the judges.

Bunny best.

All eyes were on this dapper little gent in 2015 — he went on to win best dressed boy.

Night Market kicks off in May

The Food Trust's outdoor food truck festival begins in Burholme.

MEREDITH ORLANDINI@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

Mama's Balls served up some hot dishes at last year's Night Market in Roxborough.

ALL PHOTOS BY DAVID TAVANI FOR THE FOOD TRUST

Seven years ago, The Food Trust created an event that would bring all of Philly's communities together in order to celebrate one of our favorite things — food. Four area neighborhoods will host The Food Trust's outdoor food truck festival this year, which kicks off Thursday, May 11, in Burholme, running from 6-10 p.m. at the intersection of Cottman Avenue and Rising Sun Avenue.

It continues each month through October (except for September) in the neighborhoods of Spruce Hill, Roxborough and the Italian Market.

During each Night Market, the streets will flood with music, drinks and your favorite classic food trucks and some you've maybe never heard of before.

"This year in particular, we'll be highlighting a few of Philly's immigrant communities and businesses at each Night Market," Night Market planner extraordinaires Diana Minkus and Ian Moran tell Metro.

Night Market gives you and your friends the chance to celebrate the warmer weather with some delicious finger foods, however, there might be some delicious dishes that surprise you. "Night Market is all about showing people that festival food isn't just chicken fingers and hot dogs, which are still delicious, but there's actually quite a diversity of flavors and even healthy and fresh options."

Night Market is in fact more than just a fun food festival; it's a way to help support local food entrepreneurs as well as highlight new blossoming areas of our city. Founded over 20 years ago, The Food Trust wants to bring healthy change to the city, working to ensure that everyone has access to both healthy and affordable food sources. "Night Market also gives us an opportunity to work with vendors and talk about local sourcing, healthy options and the Healthy Food Truck Initiative where they can get healthy food certified," Minkus and Moran say.

Whether you're looking for something salty and greasy or light and fresh, Night Market's plethora of food trucks are equipped to satisfy. Roam the streets of your Philly neighborhoods and find the best foods. With all the yummy options, just remember: Don't fill up at the first food truck.

Symposium, flanerie and the politics of public space

The Barnes hosts an engaging day of discussion.

JENNIFER LOGUE
@jenniferlogue
jennifer.logue@metro.us

Spend your Saturday at the Barnes for an in-depth discussion on their latest exhibition. PROVIDED

The Barnes latest exhibit, "Person of the Crowd: The Contemporary Art of Flanerie," examines work inspired by the flaneur — an idler who takes their time to stop and observe the world around them.

These observations produce artful commentary on issues ranging from gentrification, gender politics, racism and more. Over 50 artists are currently on display and the exhibit includes pieces from Marina Abramovic, Vito Acconci, Zhang Huan, Eleanor Antin and David Hammons.

To dive into the subject further, the Barnes will be hosting a special discussion on Saturday, April 15, led by a panel of artists, historians and curators.

Martha Lucy, deputy director for education & public programs and curator, says that topics won't just cover flanerie in the 19th century, but will address contemporary issues as well:

"Artist Angela Washko will address gender in cyberspace by discussing 'World of Warcraft,' the massive, multiplayer video game space where she carried out two performative interventions over the course of four years. Doreen St. Felix, a writer for MTV News, will tackle the question of the 'black flaneur,' charting the alternative paths black people have taken to be seen (and not seen)," she notes.

The day is divided into two sections: Session 1 beginning at 9:30 a.m. and Session 2 beginning at 1:30 p.m. The event is free for members and $25 for nonmembers, which includes admission to the exhibit.

For more information and to register, visit: barnesfoundation.org.

Escape to the sun

Pure Spa at Pelican Grand Beach Resort PROVIDED

How to spend a long weekend in Fort Lauderdale.

ED CONDRAN
@MetroPhilly
sports@metro.us

When it comes to the East Coast of Florida, Miami tends to grab all the headlines. But if you look just half an hour north to Fort Lauderdale, you'll find plenty of charm, great drinks and fun excursions.

View from the sea

In the yachting capital of the world, you have to take a cruise.

Sail down Millionaire's Row on the Intracoastal Waterway to see the ostentatious homes (Wayne Huizenga's estate features three waterfalls and a bell tower) and the mega yachts courtesy of Island Queen Cruises ($28 adults, $20 kids, islandqueencruises.com). The 90-minute cruise also takes visitors south to Biscayne Bay for views of the downtown Miami skyline and Miami Beach.

Grab a drink

After the sobering experience of seeing how the 1 percenters live, drop anchor at one of Fort Lauderdale's best watering holes.

The swanky Blue Martini Lounge (2432 E. Sunrise Blvd., fortlauderdale.bluemartinilounge.com) hit the spot with their bellinis and dirty martinis. After hanging out on their outdoor patio, dial it down at the H20 Cafe (101 S. Fort Lauderdale Beach Blvd., h2ocafe.net), a mellow Italian bar and bistro. The Parrot Lounge (911 Sunrise Lane, parrotlounge.com) is a local institution that started as a Spring Break hotspot a generation ago and is now a no-frills joint offering good pub grub, a raw bar and quality craft brews.

River of grass

No Fort Lauderdale trip would be complete without an airboat tour. Trek to nearby Everglades Holiday Park ($30.99, $12 and under $18.99, evergladesholidaypark.com) for a close-up look at alligators, snakes, heron and more native wildlife.

Your Fort Lauderdale boutique escape

Spring may have arrived earlier than expected, but we were ready to jump right into summer with a trip to Fort Lauderdale.

After a three-hour flight ($181 roundtrip via Newark), we felt like we were light years away upon arriving at the luxe Pelican Grand Beach Resort (2000 N. Ocean Blvd., pelicanbeach.com).

Unlike some of its ultramodern neighbors (some would argue too modern for Florida's casual, timeless beaches), the Pelican Grand exudes warmth and class. The resort conjures the feeling of Old Florida, its tin-roofed turrets and shingle siding rising regally from the sandy shores. The destination within a destination is one of the few boutique resorts right on Fort Lauderdale Beach.

Not dealing with the perpetually busy A1A is a huge plus. Adding to the tranquility is Pelican Grand's pristine private beach, which is much less crowded than those farther south. The hotel pool boasts the only lazy river in the city — parents can dig into a book while kids spend hours basking under the warm sun along the lengthy river.

For a bit of rejuvenation, the on-site Pure Spa takes a Swedish approach to holistic wellbeing, with the latest technology like Hydra Therapy, which soothes and replenishes your skin — essential after a long day in the sun and sand.

The hotel's Ocean2000 Restaurant and Lounge is a can't-miss for dinner. Ask for a table on the porch and you will find yourself in a room to dine for, so to speak, considering the dramatic view. The artisan charcuterie & cheese board features local honeycomb and housemade pickles, while the Florida lobster risotto, accompanied by fresh black truffles, is a total indulgence.

When you're reading to turn in for the day, every spacious suite offers a private balcony, while the Sky Suite penthouse or the Pure Suite are all about stunning views and opulence.

Bonnaroo throws all-night rager

Hip-hop and dance music get their own showcase at this year's iconic music festival.

EVA KIS
@thisiskis
eva.kis@metro.us

Bonnaroo has to be summer's chillest music festival — with four days of musical acts, art installations and more spread over 700 acres, you've got to pace yourself.

Not this year, hippies. Founded in the spirit of Woodstock and Phish's legendary jam sessions, 2017's Bonnaroo Music and Arts Festival is making more room for newer genres. The festival, which takes place June 8-11 at Great Stage Park in Manchester, Tennessee, is launching an all-night party on a brand new open-air stage dubbed The Other.

Because Bonnaroo's previous Other Tent just couldn't hold them anymore, the biggest names in dance, electronic and hip-hop music like costumed EDM star Marshmello, "instrumental livetronica" group Big Gigantic, Dutch DJ San Holo and more will take over for an epic all-night set.

Spanning 13 stages, Bonnaroo will feature over 130 performers led by Red Hot Chili Peppers, The Weeknd and, for their first time at the festival, U2 will perform a special set celebrating the 30th anniversary of their 1987 album "The Joshua Tree." Tickets start at $210.50 at bonnaroo.com.

Flyers' struggles could lead to Claude Giroux trade

Injuries and lack of production might spell the end of Giroux's career in Philadelphia.

EVAN MACY
@evan_macy
evan.macy@metro.us

There are few players in Philadelphia who are as long-tenured and fully indoctrinated into the sports landscape in the city as Claude Giroux, the Flyers captain and a staple with the team since 2008.

As their season came to a disappointing end, becoming the first team in NHL history to miss the playoffs during a year that contained a 10-game win streak, there is not surprisingly a lot of blame landing on the center's shoulders.

So much so that several news outlets have reported rumors, or have suggested strategically, that general manager Ron Hextall and the Flyers' front office move on and trade the 29-year-old.

After missing the postseason for the third time in five seasons with roughly the same exact core at the center of the team's offense, something has to change, right?

"When you don't make the playoffs, when you don't meet your expectations, change might happen," Giroux said, in full acknowledgement of the team's three goals per game scoring average through 32 games that shrunk to just two over the final 50. "But at the end of the day, it's not up to us. For us, it's to keep working, keep doing what we're doing. We like our team, we like our group."

Giroux faced a few road blocks that led to his decreased production and minus-15 rating. He had a constantly-changing roster and played with a bevy of different line combinations. He also had offseason surgery on his hip.

"When you try to do something and you can't do it, your mind wants to do something but your body doesn't do it, it's frustrating," Giroux said. "It was up and down like our team and it's got to be better, and it will."

Giroux scored just 14 goals in 2016-17, his lowest total since playing in just 48 games in 2012-13. He played in all 82 games this season and has scored 20 or more goals in five of his last six full seasons.

"G's a great player," Giroux's teammate and occasional linemate Wayne Simmonds said. "This year I don't know what it was. I think his hip, I don't know what it was. Maybe there was something there. Maybe he wasn't 100 percent, but he's a warrior. He's going to battle for the guys, he's our captain, he's our leader. He's not going to leave us to hang no matter how he feels. He's going to show up and he's going to put his best effort forth no matter what."

There are a lot of unknowns this offseason for a team with a deep, rich farm system and a core of players for whom expectations are always sky high. Is it possible the Flyers are not as close to contending for championships as many have thought in recent years?

"I really think that we're not far off," Giroux said. "We've shown that we can be a good team, but good teams are a little more consistent than what we were this year. It's just a couple games that we let get away from us."

Phillies vets on two different trajectories

Clay Buchholz is done for the year, Howie Kendrick has been sharp.

KYLE PHILLIPPI
@Kyle_Phillippi
sports@metro.us

Pete Mackanin didn't mince words after the Phillies' disastrous 14-4 loss to the New York Mets on Tuesday night.

"Another embarrassing game against the New York Mets," the Phillies manager said.

Indeed it was, but it also highlighted the good and the bad that the Phillies have seen in their offseason acquisitions through the first week and a half of the regular season.

Clay Buchholz, brought in via trade from the Boston Red Sox, has a $13.5 million price tag besides his name for the 2017 season, and while he'll be off the books after this year, it certainly hasn't gone the way the team had intended.

While general manager Matt Klentak said over the weekend that this organization doesn't necessarily view the veterans they bring in as potential trade deadline bait — if they turn out to be so, Klentak said, than that's a bonus — Bucholz appeared destined to be just that with the slew of young arms waiting on the farm.

After just two starts though, Buchholz is out for the year with a partial tear in his forearm. The right-hander finishes 2017 with a 0-1 record and a 12.27 ERA in just seven innings of work through two outings.

Having been through injuries before, Buchholz called the situation "frustrating."

Jake Thompson, Zach Eflin or Nick Pivetta will likely replace Buchholz in the Phillies' starting rotation.

Would any team have wanted Buchholz at the deadline anyway, especially considering the little interest he had this offseason? Probably not.

Thankfully for the Phillies, there's Howie Kendrick and to a lesser degree, Michael Saunders.

Kendrick, brought in through a trade, has been nothing short of spectacular on a team that has been lackluster. The 33-year-old leads the team with a .407 average, is one back of the lead in RBIs with five and has three doubles and a triple, as well.

He has a hit in all but one game he's played in this season.

As for Saunders, he has yet to really make his mark, but has driven in five runs and when he's flashed, he's done so in a big way with a pair of multi-hit games, including a strong 3-for-5 game against Washington in which he fell a homer shy of the cycle.

Between the two of them, there's certainly going to be some interest from contending teams come the deadline assuming they maintain or in Saunders' case, elevate just a little bit more, to keep up their value.

As for the pitching staff, well, the Phillies are seeing that maybe not even a veteran out to prove his worth can replicate what Jeremy Hellickson did on a one-year deal in 2016.

So, yes, there's some risk to bringing in veterans as the Phillies did in three players this offseason, but if they can hit on at least two of them, they could definitely become commodities over the summer.

LONGEST OF ODDS

The NBA remains the most predictable when it comes to the four major U.S. pro sports leagues. You'd have to go back to the Detroit Pistons of 2004 to recall an NBA championship victory that was truly shocking. Even that team was a No. 3 seed in the East and the season prior they were a No. 1 seed and were established as a "top team."

That's why some of these NBA playoff odds really aren't ridiculous enough. The Portland Trail Blazers are currently 300/1 odds to win the NBA title this spring. I would make the case that those odds should be more like 9,000/1.

The Celtics have 30/1 odds of winning the title this spring. I would say something more realistic would be 600/1. The only way the C's beat a playoff field with the Cavs (7/2 odds) and the star-studded Warriors (10/23 odds) in front of them is if LeBron, Kevin Durant and Steph Curry all go down with season-ending injuries. The odds of that happening probably do lie somewhere around 600/1.

GIMME BABY NOW!

So Khloe Kardashian wants to have kids with Cavaliers big man Tristan Thompson and made that public this week in ES Magazine.

"[Thompson] is already a father and I know for a fact that he would be an impeccable father," Khloe said. "I definitely want to be a mom. But I don't put pressure on it. It's not like, 'the clock is ticking.'"

Oh boy. The old "clock is ticking" deal … passive-aggressive city.

Based on those comments and the fact that Khloe has been a part of the sports world since Celtics fans chanted, "ug-ly sis-ter" at Lamar Odom in the 2010 NBA Finals — I assumed Khloe was approaching being 40 years old and the clock really was ticking when it came to a potential Tristan Jr.

Not quite. Kardashian is still just 32.

ORAL FIXATION

One of those funny-name schools that always found its way into your bracket each March was Oral Roberts. The guy who coached the school's basketball team since 1999 was Scott Sutton (pictured), and he was fired this week because his teams were not as good the past two years.

Sutton did not just all of a sudden forget how to coach basketball. Instead, he was forced to adhere to rules implemented by school president and full-time stickler, Billy Wilson.

Wilson demanded that Sutton get back in touch with the school's evangelical tradition and told him to not recruit players with tattoos. Players would also have to pass a "faith exam" to sign with Oral Roberts.

Remember folks: Bureaucrats kill societies.

I'M GONNA MAKE YOU MY MITCH

Just when everyone had their 2017 NFL mock draft game down pat, Adam Schefter has to go and ruin it for everyone. Every mock in America had Texas A&M defensive end Myles Garrett going No. 1 at the start of this week but Schefter tweeted the following on Tuesday: "Just had an NFL exec tell me, 'Don't be surprised if Myles Garrett isn't the No. 1 pick.' Exec convinced a QB is in discussion at No. 1."

That QB in discussion is said to be North Carolina QB Mitch Trubisky, who sounds like the pathological liar from your high school who peaked as a person junior year and is now an alcoholic.

In the "most likely a character from Varsity Blues" game, "Mitch Trubisky" narrowly edges out "Blake Bortles" for the top prize.

LEGAL NOTICES

City of Philadelphia Public Hearing Notice

The Committee on Rules of the Council of the City of Philadelphia will hold a Public Hearing on Friday, April 28, 2017, at 10:00 AM, in Room 400, City Hall, to hear testimony on the following items:

160680 An Ordinance to amend the Philadelphia Zoning Maps by changing the zoning designations of certain areas of land located within an area bounded by Jackson Street, Broad Street, the Schuylkill Expressway (I-76), Vare Street, Passyunk Avenue, and 24th Street.

170194 An Ordinance to amend the Philadelphia Zoning Maps by changing the zoning designations of certain areas of land located within an area bounded by 29th Street, Sedgley Avenue, Ridge Avenue, and Elmwood Avenue.

170201 An Ordinance amending Title 14 of The Philadelphia Code, entitled "Zoning and Planning," by amending Section 14-905, entitled "Non Accessory Signs," by authorizing the Director of Finance to create a separate fund for revenue collected by the City with respect to advertising on municipal property, authorizing the disposition of such revenue, and making conforming amendments to any other applicable Sections of The Philadelphia Code, all under certain terms and conditions.

170265 An Ordinance to amend the Philadelphia Zoning Maps by changing the zoning designations of certain areas of land located within an area bounded by Devereaux Avenue (extended), Keystone Street, Princeton Avenue, Keystone Street, Cottman Avenue (extended), Milnor Street, Bleigh Avenue (extended), and the Delaware River.

170266 An Ordinance to amend the Philadelphia Zoning Maps by changing the zoning designations of certain areas of land located within an area bounded by Filbert Street, 59th Street, Market Street, and Salford Street.

170282 An Ordinance amending Chapter 14-900 of The Philadelphia Code, entitled "Signs," by providing for new sign controls, entitled "1900 Market Street Digital Display Sign Regulations"; all under certain terms and conditions.

170285 An Ordinance amending Chapter 14-300 of The Philadelphia Code, entitled "Administration and Procedures," and making related changes, all under certain terms and conditions.

170306 An Ordinance to reinstate Bill No. 140438 amending Section 14-502 of the Zoning Code, entitled "CTR, Center City Overlay" and Section 14-602 of the Zoning Code, entitled "Use Tables," and to amend Section 14-803 "Motor Vehicle Parking Standards" under certain terms and conditions.

170310 An Ordinance to amend the Philadelphia Zoning Maps by changing the zoning designations of certain areas of land located within an area bounded by Aramingo Avenue, Cambria Street, Frankford Avenue, the Railroad Right-of-Way, Kensington Avenue and Lehigh Avenue.

170331 An Ordinance to amend the Philadelphia Zoning Maps by changing the zoning designations of certain areas of land located within an area bounded by Lehigh Avenue, 30th Street, Sedgley Avenue, and 22nd Street.

170333 An Ordinance to amend the Philadelphia Zoning Maps by changing the zoning designations of certain areas of land located within an area bounded by Roosevelt Boulevard, Adams Avenue, Arnott Street, Oxford Avenue and Oxford Circle.

170335 An Ordinance amending Title 14 of The Philadelphia Code, entitled "Zoning and Planning," and Title 18 of The Philadelphia Code, entitled "Commerce," to provide for the preparation and distribution of Project Information Forms with respect to certain development projects; to revise the requirements for neighborhood notice and meetings; and to make related changes; all under certain terms and conditions.

Immediately following the public hearing, a meeting of the Committee on Rules, open to the public, will be held to consider the action to be taken on the above listed items.

Copies of the foregoing items are available in the Office of the Chief Clerk of the Council, Room 402, City Hall.

Aries Make strategic moves that will help you gain respect and the support of your peers. Choose perfection and precision over excess to help you reach your goals.

Taurus Push for what you want, but do so in your own way. If you aren't afraid to stand out, people will take notice and give you the little push you need to reach your goals.

Gemini You'll face a dilemma if you mix business with pleasure. A partnership will head into a stalemate if you or the person you are dealing with isn't being authentic.

Cancer Show passion in all that you pursue. Make arrangements to socialize with people you haven't seen for some time. Make romance a priority.

Leo You'll end up being angry if you let someone force you into a compromising position. Take a pass and concentrate on personal improvements.

Virgo Emotional energy will encourage you to push through what needs to be done so that you can move forward with your plans.

Libra Don't stifle passionate feelings. Speak up about past regrets and actions you would like to take to resolve pending matters. Your honesty will be appreciated.

Scorpio Do something to boost your morale. Doing something special or exciting with a loved one will help revitalize your physical well-being.

Sagittarius Secret plans will be ruined if you aren't careful. Don't trust anyone to uphold a promise to keep something under wraps. To avoid meddling, don't share your plans.

Capricorn Turn your thoughts and ideas into something tangible. You'll have the chance to excel if you veer from the mainstream and do your own thing.

Aquarius Look for a creative outlet that will allow you to put your skills and intelligence to work. Mapping out what you want to accomplish will help you reach your goal.

Pisces Move forward at a steady pace. Don't feel pressured to jump too quickly. Stick to your game plan in order to succeed.
